

Secretary of Education Dr. Miguel Cardona
United States Department of Education
400 Maryland Avenue, SW
Washington, DC 20202

April 20, 2022

Dear Secretary Cardona,

We are 87 education, civil rights and religious organizations, representing hundreds of thousands of members and supporters. We are deeply concerned that in the wake of the recent Middle East Studies Association (MESA) vote endorsing an academic boycott of Israel, some directors and affiliated faculty in federally-funded Middle East Studies National Resource Centers (NRCs), most of which are institutional MESA members, may feel emboldened to implement the boycott in ways that will substantively hurt U.S. students and faculty and directly violate the legislative intent of Title VI of the Higher Education Act. We therefore urge you to establish safeguards to ensure that an academic boycott of Israel, or of any country within the academic purview of a federally funded area studies program, may never be implemented by the program's affiliated personnel.

As you know, NRCs were established by Title VI HEOA in order to equip university students and faculty with a full and unbiased understanding of regions and countries vital to U.S. national security. The federal legislation providing these NRCs with millions of taxpayer dollars stipulates that the funding is specifically intended “to promote access to research and training overseas, including through linkages with overseas institutions.”

An academic boycott, however, calls for the exact opposite: it seeks to deny access to research, training and education in and about the targeted country, and to break linkages with the targeted country's educational institutions.

Indeed, the official guidelines of the Palestinian Campaign for the Academic and Cultural Boycott of Israel (PACBI) endorsed by MESA urge faculty to: work toward shutting down study abroad programs in Israel and refuse to write recommendations for students who want to attend them; scuttle their colleagues' research collaborations with Israeli universities and scholars; and cancel or shut down educational events organized by students or faculty featuring Israeli leaders or scholars, or that seek to “normalize” Israel by presenting it in anything but a negative light.

All of these PACBI-compliant activities not only thwart the Israel-related educational and research opportunities of U.S. students and faculty, they directly subvert the purpose for which these centers receive federal funds. Every one of the 15 recipients of 2018 – 2022 NRC/FLAS funding in the area of Middle East Studies submitted an application touting its school's numerous educational and research opportunities to study in and about Israel and the Hebrew language, as well as the linkages with Israeli educational institutions. For example, in its application for NRC and FLAS funding, New York University's Hagop Kevorkian Center for Near East Studies touted its commitment to the study of Israel (mentioned 272 times) and Hebrew (mentioned 445 times), highlighting its robust course offerings and outreach events involving Israel-related topics and Hebrew language instruction, the university's study abroad programs to areas in the Middle East, including Israel, and the Israel and Hebrew-related scholarship of many Kevorkian Center-affiliated faculty members. Were the MESA-recommended PACBI guidelines to be implemented at the Kevorkian Center, it would clearly violate the intent and spirit of the $2.2 million that the center received in response to its 2018 application for federal funding.

Amplifying our concern about the impact of the recent MESA vote is the fact that several Middle East Studies NRC directors and dozens of NRC-affiliated faculty have publicly expressed their personal support for an academic boycott of Israel, with many signing a 2014 letter stating, “[W]e pledge not to collaborate on projects and events involving Israeli academic institutions.”

In addition, recent studies have shown that Middle East Studies faculty who support an academic boycott of Israel are likely to bring their support for the boycott into academic spaces: a 2016 study of the 15 Middle East Studies NRCs found that those directors who had endorsed BDS were more than twice as likely to host federally-funded outreach events with pro-boycott speakers; a 2017 study found that Middle East Studies departments with one or more faculty members who had endorsed an academic boycott of Israel were five times more likely to sponsor public outreach events with pro-boycott speakers, and many of those events included the promotion of BDS; and a 2020 study of 50 syllabi of courses on the Israeli-Palestinian conflict that were taught at 40 schools across the country found that courses whose instructors had been signatories to one or more petitions calling for an academic boycott of Israel assigned, on average, four times more readings authored by BDS-supporters than instructors who do not support any form of BDS.

While acknowledging that a faculty member's right to express support for an academic boycott of Israel is protected by academic freedom, it is unacceptable that federal funds could be used to implement an academic boycott that directly contravenes the purposes for which these funds have been granted. Area studies programs whose directors or affiliated faculty engage in such behavior should be ineligible to receive or renew Title VI funding. We therefore recommend:

- The Department of Education should issue a statement warning NRC directors and affiliated faculty that implementing an academic boycott of one of the countries in the NRC's purview would be a direct subversion of the stated purpose of Title VI funding.
- The Department of Education should include language in current and future NRC or FLAS applications that requires applicants to establish safeguards to prohibit their program's employees from using their positions to implement an academic boycott of any of the countries within the program's purview.

Thank you for your consideration,
